Democrats scored

Editor:

In her campaign speeches, Geraldine Ferraro likes to play "make believe" games, but she really does not know the difference between her games and real life.

When a debater takes and argues a position which is contrary to his or her personal beliefs in order to have both sides of an issue represented, that debater is said to be "playing the 'Devil's Advocate'"—but that position is advocated only during the debate. However, when Ms. Ferraro states that she is personally against an abortion but would allow her daughter or anyone else with an unwanted pregnancy to obtain an abortion, and when she continues holding that position, she is no longer playing games. She then is really saying, "I would not personally murder my unborn child, but I would allow my daughter or anyone else to murder their unborn child".

That puts Ms. Ferraro in the position of not just "playing the Devil's Advocate", but promoting the breaking of God's commandment against murder, and in doing so, she has placed herself in the position of "being the Devil's Advocate".

Based on Mr. Mondale's comments regarding abortion in the Sunday night "debate", it is clear that Mr. Mondale has also made himself the Devil's Advocate. I found it reassuring to hear again that our President Reagan knows that an unborn child is a human life, that to abort it is murder, and that such a defenseless life must be protected under our Constitution.

It would spell moral disaster for the U.S.A. to replace President Reagan and Vice President Bush with an administration so morally bankrupt that it would continue to promote the murder of 1,500,00 unborn babies each year. Every concerned citizen must vote to make sure that such a disaster does not happen.

Very truly yours,
Warren H. Zick
